This report is the first in a series of three gender equity reports. The second report will examine which factors influence intercollegiate participation changes, with a special focus on Title IX, spending on men's basketball and football, and changing preferences for less prominent men's sports. It is scheduled for release in January 2008. The third report will examine how the racial and ethnic composition of intercollegiate athletes has changed over time. It is scheduled for release in June 2008.

How Are Colleges and Universities Doing? Grading Participation, Documenting Expansion

This is a supplement to Who's Playing College Sports? Trends in Participation, which enables readers to evaluate and compare each higher education institution's performance in relation to its peers. This information can also be found online at www.WomensSportsFoundation.org, sorted by state (as it appears here), by organizational and division affiliation, alphabetically by institution name, and by grade. Conference-level averages for all figures are also provided online to allow for additional comparisons.

This component of the study does not provide a comprehensive analysis of gender equity at each institution nor does it seek to determine whether institutions are currently in compliance with Title IX. But it does report figures that contain substantial insight into an institution's commitment to women's athletics. We present the female share of undergraduates and the female share of athletes for each institution to examine whether the gender composition of an institution's athletes is similar to the gender composition of its student body. To identify institutions of higher education that recently expanded their women's athletic program, we also list the change in the number of women's participants for each institution between 2001-02 and 2004-05. For the 738 institutions in our 10-year NCAA sample, we also report changes in participation for the 1995-96 to 2001-02 period.

To identify those higher education institutions that have a female share of athletes similar to their female share of undergraduates, we report the proportionality gap for each institution. This gap equals the percentage of undergraduates that are female minus the percentage of athletes that are female. To help provide meaning to an institution's proportionality gap, we assign grades. Table 12 from the full report, reproduced at right, outlines the grading criteria, which assigns the lowest grades to those institutions at which female athletes are substantially underrepresented. To recognize their contribution towards alleviating the current underrepresentation of female athletes in the aggregate, institutions are not assigned a low grade when female athletes are overrepresented.

Table 13 from the full report, reproduced at right, presents proportionality gap grades for each athletic organization and NCAA division; it also provides the data used to compute the grade. For example, the average NCAA institution had a female share of undergraduates of 55.8% and a female share of athletes of 42.8% in 2004-05, which results in a proportionality gap of 13 percentage points and a grade of C. Among organizations, the NCCAA earned the highest grade, while within the NCAA, Divisions I-A and I-AAA earned the highest grades. In contrast, the NJCAA, COA and NCAA Division II received the worst grades.

Table 12: Interpreting the Proportionality Gap Report Card

| Rank Order | Grade |
|--|-------|
| Proportionality gap* is: | |
| 2 percentage points or less | A |
| above 2 but no more than 4 percentage points | A- |
| above 4 but no more than 6 percentage points | B+ |
| above 6 but no more than 8 percentage points | B |
| above 8 but no more than 10 percentage points | B- |
| above 10 but no more than 12 percentage points | C+ |
| above 12 but no more than 14 percentage points | C |
| above 14 but no more than 16 percentage points | C- |
| above 16 but no more than 18 percentage points | D+ |
| above 18 but no more than 20 percentage points | D |
| above 20 but no more than 22 percentage points | D- |

* The proportionality gap equals an institution's female share of undergraduates minus the institution's female share of athletes.

* NCAA refers to the National Collegiate Athletic Association; NAIA refers to the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics; NCCAA refers to the National Christian College Athletic Association; NJCAA refers to the National Junior College Athletic Association; COA refers to the California Community College Commission on Athletics; NWAAC refers to the Northwest Athletic Association of Community Colleges.

The online portion of this report also describes changes in the number of female participants over recent years for each institution of higher education. To provide additional context, we report similar figures for men. Note that changes in cross country and track and field participants are not included in these figures, because participation data for these sports contain substantial error due to changes in the EADA reporting form. As described in Appendix C of the full report, however, we were able to obtain much more reliable information on whether or not an institution offers these sports. Consequently, we report changes in the number of cross country and track and field teams to complement the participation numbers for other sports.
